Getting advice through AustralianSuper

AustralianSuper is committed to helping you create the future you want. Having access to affordable, quality financial advice plays a key role in helping you get there. Importantly, financial advisers who work with us put your best interests first. And we don’t pay them incentives, bonuses or commissions.

What you get through advice*

When you’re ready to put your financial future first, and want to meet with a professionally qualified financial adviser for more in-depth advice, here’s what to expect.

1. Getting to know you

There’s no charge for your first appointment – and it’s all about you. Your personal and financial circumstances and what’s important to you are discussed. Your adviser can then help determine the nature and complexity of advice you need and discuss any costs involved. No personal financial advice is provided in your first meeting.

2. Setting a plan

With the information from your first meeting, and with your agreement, your adviser researches solutions available and develops a personalised financial plan – a Statement of Advice (SOA). This outlines the best way forward to meet your personal and financial goals.

3. Presenting the plan

Your adviser outlines the recommendations in the SOA, and explains how the advice meets your goals and is in your best interests. They also answer any questions you may have about the advice and the next steps forward.

4. Taking action

Advice is only good advice if it’s put into action. Once you’re comfortable with the recommendations, your adviser puts the plan in place and keeps you informed at every step.
Putting you first

In providing financial advice to you, your adviser is required to:

› act honestly, with integrity, and in your best interest at all times
› obey by all relevant laws including the Financial Planner and Adviser Code of Ethics
› comply with industry standards and community expectations of professional practice and conduct
› maintain a program of ongoing professional development
› provide advice on a fee-for-service basis only after agreement with you
› help you make alternative arrangements if it’s in your best interests to receive advice from another provider or it’s not in your best interests to keep your AustralianSuper account.

How advisers are paid

Qualified advisers are paid:

› by base salary and/or
› operate on a fee-for-service basis†.

They do not receive incentives, bonuses or commissions from AustralianSuper, including when you receive insurance cover through your super†.

Where ongoing advisory services are provided, an annual fee disclosure statement will be provided. You can opt out of any ongoing service arrangement at any time.

In most instances, you can choose to pay for advice by using savings drawn from your AustralianSuper account, so long as the advice is solely related to your AustralianSuper account.

What to bring with you

To get the most out of your first face-to-face appointment, it’s a good idea to bring the following information with you:

1. Income – details of salary, investment income, Centrelink and/or overseas pensions and rental income.
3. Budget – estimate of monthly spend, such as mortgage, rent, credit card debt and loans.
4. Insurance – details of any life, disability or income protection insurance.
5. Any questions or concerns.
