Thinking of downsizing your home? Eligible Australian homeowners can contribute money from the sale of their family home into super.

How it works

If you’re 65 years or older and sell your primary residence, you may be eligible to contribute up to $300,000 as an individual or $600,000 as a couple into super from the proceeds of sale. The amount you can contribute to super can’t be greater than the total proceeds of the sale of your home.

Examples

1. Jenny and Tom are both 67 and sold their family home they have lived in for 10 years for $800,000. Using the new downsizing contribution rules they can add up to $300,000 each to their super accounts.

2. If Jenny and Tom’s house sold for $400,000, they could each contribute $200,000 to their super. If they wanted to add more to Jenny’s super, they could split the contributions by adding $300,000 to Jenny’s super and $100,000 to Tom’s super.
Eligibility
You may be eligible to make a downsizer contribution if:
› you’re 65 or older
› your home is in Australia and is not a caravan, houseboat or other mobile home
› the contract sale for your home is exchanged on or after 1 July 2018
› your home is owned by you and/or your spouse and has been for 10 years or more prior to the sale
› you have not previously made a downsizer contribution from the sale of another home.
You can find the full list of eligibility criteria on the Australian Taxation Office (ATO) website: ato.gov.au
If you sell your home, are eligible and choose to make a downsizer contribution, there is no requirement for you to purchase another home.

Tax, caps and the Government Age Pension
You won’t pay tax on the money you add to super from the sale of your home and it won’t count towards contribution caps. However, if you move your super to an account based pension (like Choice Income) it won’t be exempt from the transfer balance cap.

A downsizer contribution is not tax deductible and may affect your Age Pension eligibility through the asset test. It’s exempt from the work test, meaning you don’t have to be working a minimum amount of hours to be eligible to make a downsizer contribution to super.

How to contribute
You can make a downsizer contribution into super by completing a contribution form available from the ATO’s website. You’ll need to tell AustralianSuper before making the contribution. You can contact us using the details below.

Any downsizer contributions generally must be made within 90 days of the sale of your home, which is usually the date of settlement.

If you need more time
You may be eligible for an extension from the ATO to make a downsizer contribution. Before granting the extension, the ATO will consider the circumstances causing the delay that are outside of your control.
