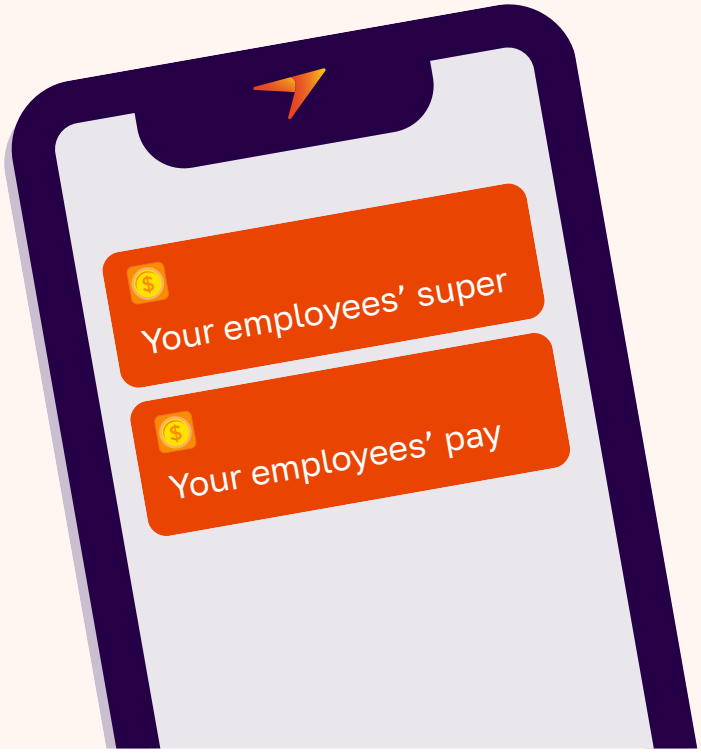
AustralianSuper

Payday Super is here.

Your employees' pay and super.

Paid together.



Payday Super is a significant reform requiring employers to pay super contributions at the same time they pay salaries and wages.

These changes aim to improve retirement outcomes by ensuring timely Superannuation Guarantee (SG) payments and helping address unpaid super issues.

At AustralianSuper, we're here to help you understand the legislation, what it means for your super obligations, and provide practical tips to support you.

Super to be paid each payday
You need to pay super at the same time as wages.

Deadlines for super payments
Super must be received within 7 business days of payday (20 days for new employees or fund changes).

New way to calculate super
Qualifying Earnings (QE) is a new term introduced under Payday Super.

System and payment improvements
SuperStream system upgrades reduce errors and failed payments.

Increased reporting
Both QE and super liabilities need to be reported through Single Touch Payroll (STP) each pay cycle.
